And, so, you know, that day, we had been told that guy was under house and there was blood there, and so I thought he was under that house. So, I give more warnings, "Hey, you better come out. Kys here"  And, adding all these people were around and he's barring, barking, trying to pull, like "Why are we just standing here?" And, so, finally, I went to send him under the house, and he was like 'Okay, I' ngoing finally," and then he gest told no, because 1got called off. I was told "No, don't send him."  Changing a command like that at the last minute in such a tense encounter with a trained dog like that at the last minute in such a tense encounter with a trained dog like that the him, had been given orders to move?  Yes.  Had the person come out?  Lickliy, the person wasn't under there, He had slipped out just prior to us getting around there, and no one had seen him.  But for a dog like that, given the green light  The best way to kind of explain it is like a bullet or a missile. You shoot it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop, it.  You can't stop, it.  You can't stop, it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop, it.  You can't stop, it.  You can't stop, it.  You can't stop it.  You can't stop, it.	He told me he had had almost the exact same scenario happen to him. He went to send a dog in the house in Afghanistan, but then he saw tow kids in the house, so he pulled the dog out, but the dog turned on him and got him out the leg. He said. "You tell them to go, and then you tell them to go, and then you tell them don't, and it confuses them." He also said "it's not uncommon.  It's almost like it is releasing their tension to bite.  In a split second you tell them "no," it confuses them. So, he gave ne some things to work on, some basic stuff, and to work back up and we did. I was out of work for awhile after that November incident due to the armbite, When I came back there were other incident due to the armbite, When I came back there were other incidents, scenes that we've been on, and he had been fine. He listerned. Just something about that Saturday in July  Was there en upthing different about that Saturday in July Was there en upthing different about that Saturday in July  Was there en upthing different about that Saturday in July  Was there only nopple hidding in that house. And, he heard that, and he thought "It was time to go," but I was like "No," and he wasn't having it. Which, we had been out there already for like a 3 minutes. Have you were been out at a seene like that for that long under those circumstances?  No. Not using him.
